

Speciation refers to the distribution of the different chemical species of an element in a system. A speciation analysis i.e., the qualitative and quantitative analysis of the different chemical species of an element provides better insight into environmental and health related issues arising due to the prevalence of the element in a system. The mobility and toxicity of an element may vary with its oxidation states.

Methods have been developed and are in routine practice for speciation analysis.