

Simple and rapid methods are available for the visual detection of F, Cr and Fe in water. These are colourimetric methods i.e., the concentration of an element can be determined by the colour that develops on executing a chemical process. These processes are simple and do not need specialised or skilled personnel.